Penelope's Tapestry is a work of art created by the Greek artist, Penelope. It is a tapestry that depicts the story of Odysseus and his wife, Penelope.

The tapestry is made of wool and measures approximately 9 feet by 6 feet. It is believed to have been created around the year 1250 BC.

The tapestry tells the story of how Odysseus went off to fight in the Trojan War and how, during his absence, Penelope was besieged by suitors who wanted to marry her.

Penelope was faithful to Odysseus and refused to marry any of them. She told them that she would marry whoever could string Odysseus' bow and shoot an arrow through twelve axe heads.

None of the suitors could do it, but Odysseus, disguised as a beggar, did it easily. He then killed all the suitors.

The tapestry is a beautiful work of art that tells a fascinating story. It is currently on display at the National Archaeological Museum in Athens, Greece.

The tapestry is believed to date back to the 12th century, and is one of the oldest surviving examples of Greek embroidery. It is made of linen, with intricate designs embroidered in wool. The central scene depicts a battle between two armies, with soldiers on horseback and foot, as well as chariots and elephants. There are also scenes of hunting and daily life.

The tapestry is in remarkably good condition considering its age, and is a valuable example of early Greek craftsmanship.
